About the Language

A Remember the difference between the nominative case and accusative case of the following nouns:

nominative Metella Caecilius mercator

accusative Metellam Caecilium mercatorem

B A large number of words, such as ancilla and taberna, form their accusative case in the same way as Metella. They belong to a “family of nouns” known as the first declension and look like this:

nominative Metella ancilla taberna

accusative Metellam ancillam tabernam

The nominative ending of the first declension is -a, and the accusative ends in -am.

C Another large group of nouns belongs to the second declension. Most of these words form their accusative in the same way as Caecilius. For example:

nominative Caecilius servus amicus

accusative Caecilium servum amicum

D You have also met several nouns belonging to the third declension. For example:

nominative mercator leo senex canis

accusative mercatorem leonem senem canem

The nominative ending of the third declension may take various forms, but the accusative nearly always ends in -em.

Practice

Practicing the Language

A Write out each sentence, completing it with the correct word in parentheses. Then translate the sentence into English.

1 mercator e villa (quaerit, ambulat).

2 servus ad hortum (recitat, venit).

3 coquus ad culinam (revenit, habet).

4 Syphax servum ad villam (dulcit, intrat).

B The following words are all in the nominative case:

pictor

Celer

ianua

canis

Quintus

Metella

pictura

leo

Hercules

Find their accusative forms in the story, pictor, on page 37. Make three lists of their accusative forms to coincide with their declensions, as explained on page 41.

C Write out each sentence, completing it with the correct case of the noun in parentheses. Then translate the sentence into English. For example:

(servus, servum) vinum portat.

servus vinum portat.

The slave carries the wine.

1 amicus (servus, servum) laudat.

2 senex (taberna, tabernam) intrat.

3 (dominus, dominum) cibum gustat.

4 (mercator, mercatorem) Metellam salutat.

7 (senex, senem) in foro ambulat.

8 ancilla (pictor, pictorem) ad atrium ducit.

Culture

The Town of Pompeii

The town of Pompeii was built on a low hill of volcanic rock about five miles (eight kilometers) south of Mount Vesuvius and close to the mouth of a small river. It was one of a number of prosperous towns in the fertile region of Campania. Outside the towns, especially along the coast of the bay, there were many villas and farming estates, often owned by wealthy Romans who were attracted to the area by its pleasant climate and peaceful surroundings.

The town itself covered 163 acres (66 hectares) and was surrounded by a wall. The wall had eleven towers and eight gates. Roads led out from these gates to the neighboring towns of Herculaneum, Nola, Nuceria, and Stabiae, and to the harbor.

Two wide main streets, known today as the Street of Shops and Stabiae Street, crossed near the center of the town. A third main street ran parallel to the Street of Shops. The other streets, most of which also ran in straight lines, divided the town neatly into blocks. Most streets probably did not have names, and a stranger visiting the town would have had to ask the way from the local people. The present names were invented in modern times to make identification and location of buildings easier. The streets, constructed of volcanic stone, had high paved sidewalks on one or both sides to enable pedestrians to avoid the traffic of wagons, horses, and mules and to keep out of the garbage and rainwater that collected in the roadway. Stepping stones provided convenient crossing places.

In all the main streets there were bakers' shops and bars where hot and cold drinks and snacks could be bought. The main shopping areas were in the forum and along the Street of Shops to the northeast of the Stabian baths. Carved or painted signs indicated different kinds of stores: the figure of a goat announced a dairy; a hammer and chisel advertised a stonemason. General advertisements and public notices were painted on the whitewashed walls outside shops and houses. We can still see notices advertising shows in the amphitheater and political slogans supporting candidates in the local elections.

At the western end of the town was the forum. This large and impressive open space, with a covered colonnade on three sides, was the center for business, local government, and religion.

There were two theaters. Popular shows for large audiences were performed in the big open-air theater, which could hold about 5,000 people, while the smaller one, which was roofed, was used for concerts and for other shows. At the eastern end of the town was a huge sports ground and next to it an amphitheater in which gladiatorial combats and wild animal hunts were staged. This amphitheater was large enough to seat every inhabitant in Pompeii and visitors from neighboring towns as well.

Like a modern seaport, Pompeii was a place where people of many nationalities were to be seen: Romans, Greeks, Syrians, Jews, Africans, Spaniards, and probably several other nationalities as well, with their different languages and different religions. This regular coming and going of people, many of whom were merchants and businessmen, was made possible by the peaceful conditions that existed throughout the provinces of the Roman Empire at this time.

Pompeii

From Britain in the northwest to Syria and Palestine in the east, Rome maintained peace and provided firm government. The frontiers of the empire were held secure by Roman troops stationed at important points. A system of well-built roads made travel by land relatively easy and provided an effective means of communication between Rome and distant parts of the empire. For many purposes, particularly for trade, travel by sea was more convenient. Ships carried cargoes of building materials, foodstuffs, and luxury goods across the Mediterranean; taxes were collected in the provinces. Pompeii was not a large town, but it played its part in the flourishing commercial and cultural life of the empire.

The town's water supply was brought from the hills by an aqueduct; on reaching Pompeii, it was stored in large tanks on high ground at the northern side. The pressure created by the water in these tanks provided a good flow through underground lead pipes to all parts of the town, including the public baths. Public fountains, like this one in the Street of Shops, stood at many street corners. Most people drew their water from these, but wealthier citizens paid special rates for water piped directly into their homes.
